

JAMES W. CLYDE.

One of the most successful cattlemen of Wasatch county is James W. Clyde. He is not only a successful cattleman, but one of our largest and most enterprising farmers, owning more real estate than any other man in Wasatch county.

He was a son of George W. and Jane McDonald Clyde, born at Springville, Utah, August 31st, 1856. He came to this county with his parents in 1861, arriving at Heber on the first day of October. At an early period in the county's history his parents built a beautiful home of modern architecture, the finest dwelling house in the county at the date of its construction.

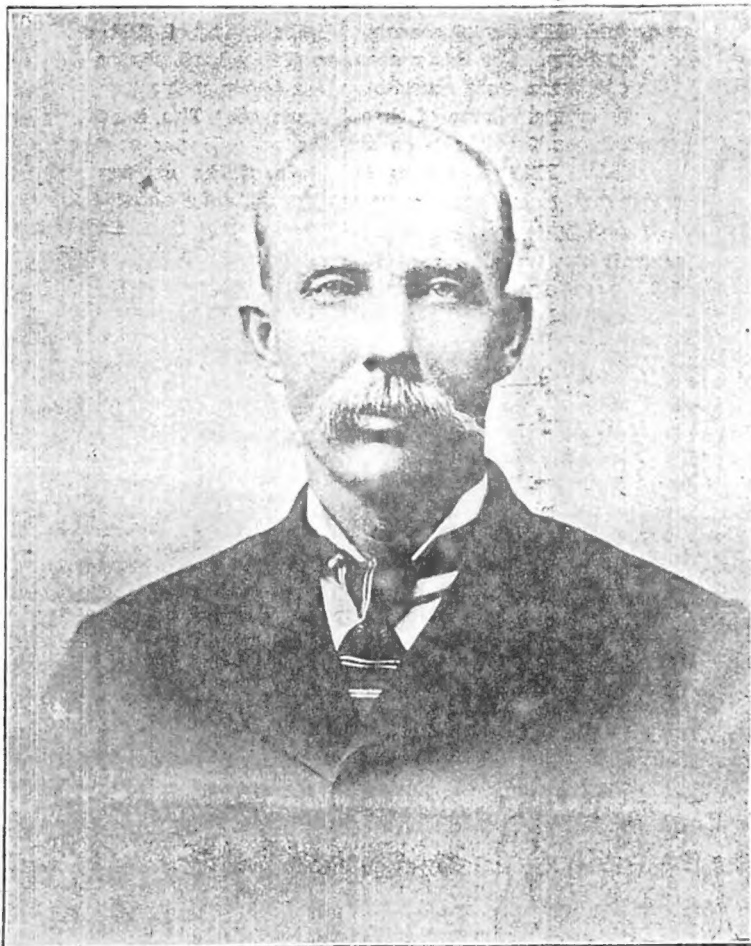

On December 12, 1884, he married Mary Campbell and a few years later he built the beautiful brick home where he now resides, which is shown in the accompanying illustration.

Though retiring and unassuming, he is a man of more than average business tact and executive ability, and as a recognition of this was elected as the first mayor of Heber City.

He was a member of the state legislature in 1899, being "the cowboy legislator from Wasatch." He was a member of the board of trustees for the town of Heber one term and has been president of the board of trustees of Heber schools for many years and still holds down that position. He is one of the directors of the Bank of Heber City, and is one of the Napoleons of finance of this county.
